During WP5 - Youth Mentorship Activation Lab, 158 participants from more then seven countries took part in interactive mentoring activities designed to encourage reflection, dialogue and cooperation. After an opening plenary and inspiring stories from experienced mentors, civic leaders, and youth mentees, the breakout room sessions gave participants an opportunity to work in smaller groups, discuss their experiences openly and exchange practical ideas for strengthening youth participation and civic engagement. Each group reflected on what they had learned during the mentoring activities and agreed on a number of personal and shared commitments for the future. The statements below capture the spirit of these discussions and represent the participants' own intentions to continue supporting others, stay engaged and apply the knowledge gained through the project.

We will keep in touch after this project and help each other if someone need support.

We want more young people to join activities like this because everybody have something to say.

We will try to include people who are sometimes quiet and make sure everyone can speak in future similar projects.

We will share what we learned with friends and classmates, not keep it only for ourselves.

We will listen more before giving advice because every person has different story.

We will try to encourage our peers to take part in local decisions, even if it looks like small things.

We will start our mentorship story and share our experience to our peers and younger generations

We will try to connect schools, universities and NGOs to work together more often because together we can do more.

We will not wait for perfect moment to make change because mall steps are also important.

We will stay active after this project and keep contact with people we met here.

We will stay curious and learn from people with different backgrounds and ideas.

We commit to respecting different opinions even if we don't always agree.

We will help young people who are less confident to speak and share their ideas.

We hope to work together again in another international project in the future.

We will remember lessons and experience from this project.
